

Translation of documents

After the document has been legalised or issued with an Apostille, you may have to have it translated. A document does not have to be translated when it is drawn up in the Dutch, English, German or French language.

The translation always follows the legalisation or Apostille. The legalisation or Apostille stickers namely also have to be translated.

The translation has to be done by a translator who is certified by a Dutch court and is listed in the Register of certified translators and interpreters (Rbtv). See www.bureaubtv.nl for an overview of certified interpreters and translators.

If it is not possible to have the translation done in the Netherlands, you can also have the document translated by a certified translator abroad. You must then get both the original document and the translation legalised or issued with an Apostille.

About Contact Press

Disclaimer Privacy Cookies Accessibility Sitemap

